In 1941, he was awarded the DSO for gallantry in action against the Germans in North Africa. The citation states that Singhji, as squadron commander, successfully withdrew two squadrons from encirclement by German and Italian forces in the campaign at Mecholi /El Mechili?/.

He returned to India in October 1941. In 1942, he was sent to the Indian Embassy in Washington as deputy director of public relations. During his tour, he visited various US military training centers. He returned to India in 1943 and became commandant of the Second Royal Lancers. In 1945, he was detailed once more to Washington in the capacity of first military attaché of the Indian Embassy.

In 1946, he was promoted to the rank of brigadier general and was given command of the Piska area. In June 1947, he became director of the Indian Armored Corps with headquarters in New Delhi.

After the partition of India and Pakistan in August 1947, Singhji was promoted to major general and became commanding general of the Delhi and Punjab Command.
